Shirley J. Saldamarco is the Director of Creative Services and a member of the Faculty at the Entertainment Technology Center and School of Drama at Carnegie Mellon University. She is also Director of Carnegie Mellon's Robot Hall of Fame and is on the Advisory Board for Carnegie Science Center Robo World.

She has over two decades of experience in producing broadcast television, cross-continent, live simulcasts and location based experiences. She has produced and supervised the installation of exhibits at Carnegie Science Center, Heinz History Center, Independent Seaport Museum and The National Civil War Museum in Harrisburg.

Shirley is also President of Interactive Media Productions, the company she founded in 1982, which provides clients with Custom Broadcast and Non-broadcast Video Production, DVD and Intranet Training, Web-casting, Meeting Planning, Staging, Power-point Presentations, Video Walls, Computer Generated Graphics and Animation.

As an Independent Producer her projects include documentaries, public affairs programs, and special programming, which have aired on PBS, network, and cable television in the United States, Israel, and Europe. She is the recipient of numerous awards including an Emmy nomination, Women and film Award, Kremetz Anti-Stigma Award, Pennsylvania Psychological Association Award and several Telly Awards.

Shirley has a particular interest in producing quality programming for children ages two to six and produced the pilot, "Charlie's Sharing Adventure" which has found an audience in daycare organizations and preschools. This same interest landed her the position of dialogue Director for 52 episodes of "Johnson and Friends", on the Fox Network. She also produced, "Once Upon a Toon", a co-venture between the Entertainment Technology Center, cartoonist and storyteller, Joe Wos and Production Masters, Inc.
